

Echoes from Mountain and Valley.

THE PEMIGEWASSET, PLYMOUTH, N. H.

This house has begun the season under the most favorable circumstances and it will not be for lack of hospitality on the part of Mr. C. H. Marden, the popular manager, and his corps of able assistants, if it is not a success.

The well known face of Fred Adams, the genial clerk, is again seen in the office, also Myron Browley, formerly of the Windsor House, Manchester, and William Butterfield as book-keeper. C. A. Stevens is steward, to whom we can render no greater compliment than to say that no house in the mountain region sets a better table than the one over whose cuisine he presides. The head waiter with his small army of white-capped young ladies form a pleasing feature of the dining hall. Mrs. Corwin, a lady of much experience both here and at the Bermudas is housekeeper.

Already nearly a hundred arrivals are booked and the house is fast being filled. An excellent orchestra is in attendance for the benefit of those who wish to "skip the light fantastic," or those more sedate persons who prefer to sit on the broad piazzas and make up pleasant tete-a-tete or smoke, while strains from the dreamy waltz come floating out on the night and lends a peculiar romantic charm to the scene.

The nights here are just right for good healthy sleeping, being neither so cold as to require an abundance of bed clothes, or so hot as to necessitate going without them. This makes it very desirable for those who come here for rest and recreation. Few summer hotels can offer greater inducements to the artist and sightseer than this one. It will be safe to say that no place in the mountain or valley region is sketched by so great a number of persons as the famous Livermore Falls. A delightful drive of two miles brings one to these falls where the stool and umbrella of the artist may be seen perched in almost every place where there is room for them. Another place much frequented by the seeker after the beautiful in nature is Mt. Prospect, and certainly the prospect from this eminence is one of the most beautiful we ever saw. It is beyond all power of description and must be seen to be in any degree appreciated. How tame and inadequate mere words seem to us when we wish to portray on paper the sublime and grand in nature. To stand and drink the beauty ourselves then, and commend it to the notice of others is all we can do. Among other points of interest it may be well to mention the fact that the building in which Webster made his maiden speech is situated in this village. It is a small, one story building and is still in good condition. It is now fittingly used as a library, but remains in every respect as when the youthful orator over half a century ago addressed the people of this place, and they do well to point it out with pride to the visitor. As a hint to young admirers and followers of the great statesman I repeat the suggestion of a friend who invited me to go with him, and lean against the building with the hope that we might draw some inspiration from it. We did so, but I hope those who follow us will be blessed with greater drawing propensities than we were, for despite our leaning neither of us are conscious of any great increase in intellectuality or otherwise.

I have mentioned only a few points of interest, easy of access from the Pemigewasset, but there are many others which time and space forbid a description of and will reserve for some future letter. I forgot to mention that the guests of the house were presented last week with souvenir bills of fare, on the corner of which were miniature photographs of the above mentioned house and the famous falls.

One Raymond excursion has penetrated into the mountains thus early, and were handsomely dined at this house. Last Saturday the Massachusetts Press Association to the number of about one hundred and seventy-five made this their halting place for dinner, and went on their way rejoicing. Barnum, having plastered the town all over with bills some two weeks since, will startle the natives with the "greatest show on earth" the 27th of this month.

Some very fine turnouts have arrived with their owners, among the most conspicuous of which are those of A. M. Kidder of New York, and Mrs. George H. Quincy of Boston. Nothing has occurred in the sporting line since the exciting tub race of last week with the exception of a few sets at tennis, at which Howard Josselyn of Manchester proved himself champion of the house.

Mr. Charles W. Spencer of Cambridge started last Monday on his bicycle for a trip to the Hub, from there he goes to Kennebunkport, Me.

Among the recent arrivals are, C. J. Shaw, New York; Wm. Byrne, Rochester, N. Y.; B. G. Leeds, San Jose, Cal.; Geo. T. Hill and son, Boston; Ira L. Spencer and wife, St. Johnsbury,

Vt.; T. A. Josselyn, wife and children, Portland, Me.; F. J. Carpenter, Providence, R. I.; Mrs. J. L. Thompson, Suse Thompson, Leverett Thompson, Chicago, Ill.; J. G. Fogg, Boston; B. Vaughn and wife, S. L. Thorndike and wife, J. G. Thorpe and wife, Miss A. M. Longfellow, Miss M. K. Longfellow, J. J. Myers, E. M. Parker, Cambridge; G. W. Hollis, J. Nelson Faught, Geo. Hoyt, C. H. Damon, F. E. Skinner, Mrs. H. W. Atkins, Ruth Atkins, J. F. Hill and wife, Mrs. E. A. Parker and maid, Arthur Hook, W. F. Burgess, G. W. Gould, Geo. E. Butler, Boston; E. B. Kelley, Lawrence; Dr. Kimball, Lowell; Mrs. Ole Bull, Cambridge; John Preston and wife, Salem; T. B. Newhall and wife, Lynn; Wm. H. Flint and wife, Providence.

The Moosilauke.

BREEZY POINT, N. H., July 25.

The little boy with the umbrella over his head, who sometimes appears unwelcomely in Boston papers, has gone in out of the wet. His umbrella must be wet through and probably it is quite worn out by this time. This is the third "spell o' weather," as farmers say, since the first of May that we have patiently or impatiently endured. We had two weeks of almost constant rain in May; one week in June, to accommodate the muster at Concord probably, and now we are in the midst of another whose length we are at present not able to state. This is another year of a total eclipse of the sun, and as we are not to be favored with a view of that spectacle on this side of the world, perhaps this extraordinary weather is being sent us as our part in the celebration. We are certainly getting all the eclipse of the sun that we want, but if we were to be consulted we should perhaps choose to have it total for a short time and be through with it.

Here at the Moosilauke we are trying to be cheerful in spite of weather, and we are a good company of people for that purpose. If we are cast down we are not destroyed. We think it best to reverse the every day philosophy, "look outward and not inward, look upward and not downward." It is decidedly more cheerful in these days to look inward, for here we see open fires to keep out the dampness, and cheerful faces to keep out the "blues." Groups of friends are scattered about in various places. Here are two quartettes playing whist, there a trio enjoying a game of dominoes, and yonder table with its whitened rectangle and gay little red and white pins, tells the story of cribbage even if we could not hear the "fifteen two, fifteen four, fifteen six and a pair—eight." All this is in the hall. In the parlor there is a long row of young men and women dancing the Virginia Reel to the lively tune of "Little Brown Jug." I never saw so large a proportion of tall young people in my life as there are here, and this lofty row which makes up the dance is really what Sairey Gamp would call "imposing."

It is delightful to see how every one seems to enjoy life in spite of the rain. If the clouds rise a little so that we can see the tops of the lower mountains, like Cushman or Kineo, we see half a dozen or more starting for Baker's river by the Dartmouth or Clark's path. They say it is a grand sight in these days of high water, but so far, I have been satisfied to take their word for it. Prof. Burton has established his headquarters on the summit of Moosilauke in order to make a map of this region. This is his fourth day there and not a rod of mother earth has he been able to see yet. It is regular Mount Washington weather, and in that particular Moosilauke is by no means anxious to rival its distinguished neighbor. The Appalachian Mountain Club has voted three hundred dollars to improvements about this locality and they could not have appropriated money more wisely.

The Boston tenor, Mr. George J. Parker, comes to-day for a visit to "The Moosilauke" and all the guests are anticipating a great deal of pleasure in consequence.

J. H. Ricketson of the Hollis Street choir, spent a night here last week on his way to the summit, and he delighted every one by his fine singing. It is quite rare to find a professional singer who is generous with his gift of song, but Mr. Ricketson, when he saw the pleasure of the guests in his music and their desire for more, sang again and again in response to their call.

We have had charades, acting verbs, shadow pantomimes, impromptu stories and no end of amusements to enliven both days and evenings. Every one seems happy and no one gets cold even if it is rainy and cheerless without. The house is enjoying the same successful patronage that it had last year and the guests seem like one great family.
